SPOTLIGHT ON

JUSTICE LEAGUE UNLIMITED

INTERVIEW WITH MARK WAID

The bestselling, fan-favorite team of Mark Waid and Dan Mora—fresh off the monumental Absolute Power and the beloved Batman/Superman: World's Finest—have their sights set on the greatest super-team in comic book history, launching a new era of an iconic franchise in the can't-miss Justice League Unlimited.

One of the pivotal series in DC's All In initiative, Justice League Unlimited is truly an all-in moment, as Superman, Batman, and Wonder Woman expand the Justice League like never before—uniting Earth's heroes in a new Watchtower and dealing with massive threats of all kinds, including those sparked in the game-changing one-shot DC All In Special. Here's insight on the November-debuting Justice League Unlimited, direct from Waid.

Justice League Unlimited is intriguing because the DC Universe heroes are all working together. What kind of impact does this have on the DCU?

One of the things that come out of Absolute Power is the heroes deciding that this whole event probably wouldn't have happened had the Justice League not disbanded and they were still properly communicating with each other. So now it's not a matter of the traditional JL working together, it's a case of enlisting everyone who has powers and wants to be on the team. There's space for the Justice Society, for the Titans, and it will be Superman, Batman, and Wonder Woman knowing based on any oncoming threats who is best to take that threat on.

Will every hero be drafted, or will we see a vetting process where some characters get rejected?

There's a couple of noes, but mostly when Superman asks you to join his club, you join the club.

Is it tricky keeping track of whom to include?

With such a big cast, I get trading cards to help visualize whom I have in play wherever I need them to be. If I didn't have that visual in front of me, it'd be much harder to keep track of them all. But Dan loves these characters and loves the chance to get to draw them all, very much like George Pérez in how he wants to draw everybody.
